The Chicago Tribune of Tuesday says:—

New York exchange is abundant—too much so for the profit and convenience of our bankers. They take it from customers at par a ½ discount; and the nominal solling price is ½ per cent premium, though concessions are readily obtained on round lots. Par is often accepted by the larger banks. Chief Justice Bigelow, of Massachusetts, has rendered the following decision in the case of the Bank of Mutual Redemption, of Boston:—

It is ordered in the above case that the injunction herestofore issued be continued, so far as it restrains and prohibits said bank from allowing a less amount of specie to be kept constantly on hand than may be equal to fitteen per cent of its liabilities for circulation and deposits—the said bank being required to keep not less than that amount constantly on hand; also, so far as it prohibits and restrains said bank from issuing its notes and bills with any agreement or understanding that the same shall not be put into immediate and unrestricted circulation,

This decision will excite great interest among those in-terested in the management of our banks. A very large number of the banks have frequently acted, it is probable, upon the same construction of the law as was given to it by the Bank of Mutual Redemption. At all events the points in issue have long been a matter of discussion upon State sirest, and the present decision will therefore upon State street, and the present decision will therefor be looked to as one of great importance.
